Sex lives can be casual for students

By Rebekah Kleinman & Kristina Dunham
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITOR

Ashley met Brian at a party one night at the beginning of the semester. They spent the night dancing, drinking and "getting to know each other." The next morning, they both awoke in Brian's bed. In silence, they both put on their clothes, trying to remember the name of the person next to them. And then they went their separate ways.

Although it's a fictional plot, for some UA students this scenario is close to reality.

According to the 2002 Health and Wellness Survey conducted by Campus Health last spring, more than 70 percent of UA students have had sex.

Although the specific number of students who have been involved in a one-night stand was not determined, Lee Ann Hamilton, a health educator at Campus Health, said she receives calls from students who have been involved in a one-night stand to occur because they believe that they are the last virgin on campus?" she said. "In the first half, we didn't play as well, but in the second half we did play very well. It's a big confidence booster."

Besides their win against Kansas, this was the first time this season that the Wildcats had played with the swagger of a No. 1 team.

The Wildcats' dominance in the second half was due to stellar defensive pressure along with near-flawless execution on the offensive end.

The defensive combination of Stoudamire and freshman Andre Iguodala held the sharp shooting Kapono to a mere 7-of-23 shooting performance. Iguodala's efforts were rewarded by the Wildcats' dominance in the second half.

"We needed to take care of the ball," Olson said. "We finally had a game where we had single digit turnovers. We also limited them to eight offensive rebounds and we did a really good job of not giving them many second chance shots."