Betty Baker, a long-time employee of the Student Union Memorial Center who was close to the university feel like a family, died over the weekend at the age of 72.

"The university can be an intimidating place and can seem large and impersonal. Then there's Betty. She made the university feel like a family," said President Peter Likins.

Baker died after suffering from a chronic respiratory illness for many years. Likins said he met Baker not long after he was elected president in 1980 and then moving on to the newly created Field House 10 years later.

"The university can be an intimidating place and can seem large and impersonal. Then there's Betty. She made the university feel like a family," said President Peter Likins.

Baker died after suffering from a chronic respiratory illness for many years. Likins said he met Baker not long after he was elected president in 1980 and then moving on to the newly created Field House 10 years later.

"The university can be an intimidating place and can seem large and impersonal. Then there's Betty. She made the university feel like a family," said President Peter Likins.

Baker died after suffering from a chronic respiratory illness for many years. Likins said he met Baker not long after he was elected president in 1980 and then moving on to the newly created Field House 10 years later.

"The university can be an intimidating place and can seem large and impersonal. Then there's Betty. She made the university feel like a family," said President Peter Likins.

Baker died after suffering from a chronic respiratory illness for many years. Likins said he met Baker not long after he was elected president in 1980 and then moving on to the newly created Field House 10 years later.