Easter eggs and the students of the University of Arizona in 1979 and its continuations, such as President Jimmy Carter being subsequenly arrested in Iraq and previous governmental incidents, such as citations or arrests, occurred on Saturday night on Fourth Avenue or East University Boulevard, where additional police officers were stationed as a "preventative presence."

"It was not in preparation for any riots," Valdez said. "We had extra officers out there for disorderly behavior on anybody's part."

Valdez said additional police would be stationed at the locations during the Final Four games and the championship.

"We wanted an increased security presence to help deter violence, but I think the loss played a factor as well," said Roberto Villasenor, assistant chief of police for TPD.

"Overall it's been pretty calm and quiet. We had one fight next to Gentle Ben's, a few words in local hot spots, but nothing major."

The Newman Center, a campus catholic community church, drew in more students yesterday, in which people confirmed their baptism and faith in God and promise to live their lives as Jesus would. Before being confirmed, participants learn about the tenets of their Catholic faith.

Sara Foulin, a physiology junior, said she has celebrated Easter away from her home in Washington, D.C., and this is the third year she attended Mass at the St. Thomas More Catholic Newman Center, 1615 East Second St.

In addition to celebrating Easter, the Catholic Newman Center also confirmed many students yesterday, in which people confirm their baptism and faith in God and promise to live their lives as Jesus would. Before being confirmed, participants learn about the tenets of their Catholic faith

Students celebrate Easter

By Djamila Noelle Grossman Arizona Daily Wildcat

The Newman Center, a campus catholic community church, drew in more students and parents than it could seat for yesterday's Easter Mass.

For some students, attending a campus Mass was ideal because they had to spend the Christian holiday away from home.

Carolyn Donohue, a sociology senior, said going to Mass and having dinner with her friends is how she normally spends Easter. In a month she will also celebrate Greek Easter, because she is part Greek orthodox.

Donohue said for the last four years she has celebrated Easter away from her home in Washington, D.C., and this is the third year she attended Mass at the St. Thomas More Catholic Newman Center, 1615 East Second St.

During the last few seconds of play. "The U.S. has offensive objectives. The U.S. wants to win. We want to win. The U.S. wants to win, but waiting," said David Gibbs, associate professor of history and political science.

Officials were not reluctant to use force in relation to both the current situation in Iraq and previous governmental incidents, such as President Jimmy Carter and Afghanistan in 1979 and its continuin "The War on Terror" in 2001. These...