The hurricane that struck the Gulf Coast Saturday also impacted students at the UA, including the student body president who is gone this week after leaving to help his family in Texas.

Cade Bernsen, Associated Students of the University of Arizona president, left Friday evening for Beaumont, Texas, one of the cities hit hardest by Hurricane Rita, the second hurricane to pummel the Gulf Coast region in four weeks.

Erin Hertzog, ASUA executive vice president, will act in Bernsen's place while he is gone, which he said will probably last at least a week. As part of her duties Hertzog will give a speech on Wednesday at the Campaign Arizona ceremony and attend the Arizona Board of Regents meeting Thursday and Friday, said Tyler Carrell, ASUA chief of staff.

The Category 3 storm that came ashore through Beaumont and Port Arthur, Texas, had 120 mph winds.

After arriving in Austin, Texas, Friday and driving to Houston Saturday, Bernsen said, he and

Run 'N' Roll brings in $140K for disabilities

Race benefits 70 wheelchair athletes

By Danielle Rideau
ARIZONA DAILY WILDCAT

Runners, walkers and individuals with disabilities alike rose with the sun and raced around the UA campus yesterday morning to collect money for the Disability Resource Center.

About 600 entrants participated in the 24th annual Jim Click Run 'N' Roll, which is the DRC's No. 1 money-maker for their Adaptive Athletics Program, said Program Coordinator Janet Olson.

Adaptive Athletics is a program that combines various physical disabilities with sports, Olson said, and the proceeds made from the Run 'N' Roll will directly benefit the program, which supports 70 wheelchair athletes.

Yesterday's race, which included a series of eight-kilometer and three-kilometer wheelchair, walking, running and kids categories, raised about $140,000 for Adaptive Athletics operating costs, Olson said.

Because the Adaptive Athletics operating costs are not provided by the UA, Olson said, the Run 'N' Roll helps cover costs for travel, wheelchairs for athletes and equipment repair.

In addition to the disabled community, the race also included participation and volunteer efforts by students, UA athletes and members from Greek Life.
